His name is Julius Kuttner-at least, that is the name he gave the police, Yesterday he couldn't speak a word of English; this morning he spoke with fair fluency. He said, among other things, that he had been living in his vacant lot cave because of ill health, believing that strong again. For food, he said, he depended largely upon garbage boxes, picking from them such pieces of bread or meat as had been swept from the table of Dives for the sustenance of Lazarus. It is altogether a remarkable story he tells. His poverty seems to be a matter of choice. His mental condition is apparently clear. At the hearing this mora-
